Person 1: So, do you have any inspiring character that resembles Monday?

Person 2: (smiles) Yeah, it's Madan Gowri.

Person 1: Who is that, and why?

Person 2: Hmmm, he is a YouTuber from Tamil Nadu, like a single man "Army."

Person 1: That's cool. Explain more.

Person 2: I think, from nearly my second year of college, I've been following him on a daily basis. He is one of my inspirations.

Person 1: Why don't you like his videos much nowadays?

Person 2: To be honest, sometimes he can be a bit boring, but he generally goes with the flow and talks about everything and anything (smiles).

Person 1: Then why does Monday remind you of him?

Person 2: I don't know, but once he used to have a motivational story video every Monday, and that was interesting.

Person 1: That's great. Are you still following him?

Person 2: I still watch his videos randomly, not on a daily basis.

Person 1: Why is he inspiring?

Person 2: From his 1000 subscribers, I was one of them. Now he has 72 lakhs subscribers. I might not be part of his mg.squad now, but from his videos, speeches, gestures, and his growth, everything is inspiring. Before, he was a single person, and now he maintains an office, hired people from his squad, attends a lot of college programs. It makes me think that from YouTube, his hard work, he is successful now. People might hate, saying he just copies from Wikipedia. I want to ask them something – even we can do that, but we didn't. Blaming his success is just stupid, right? For a clear explanation, it's not copying from Wikipedia; it's researching on different websites or blogs to make a video on that topic. We, people, knew only about Wikipedia, thinking it could give all the details, right? (giving an insulting smile)

Person 1: Ha, chill, chill. Why so serious? Yeah, accepting he is really inspiring and successful. Any ending quote for his success?

Person 2: Sure, "Hello, everyone. I'm Madan Gowri, and Hello, my dear MG squad." It's his success and our inspiration.
